Sustainability plan gets new lease on life

BY LEA SMALDON
Didsbury Review

Work is once again resuming on a sustainability plan for Didsbury with hopes it can be completed by the end of the year.

Sideline by the 2007 municipal elections, consultation is expected to begin once again to develop a long-term plan to guide such possible issues as affordable housing, arts and heritage, economic development, energy, and solid waste in the growing town.

Municipal project specialist Brittany Hutton is currently compiling previously obtained comments and information gathered over the years to help develop an all-encompassing plan.

"People are starting to wrap their heads around it a little more.

Sustainability means a lot of different things to a lot of different people," she said.

Based on the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association's template for sustainability planning, town council will eventually be making decisions on just what to include in five diverse areas of planning.

Termed the five pillars of sustainability, planning categories include economy, society, culture, environment and governance.

"It's up to us to council to decide what initiatives or actions are included under the five pillars. We've already got a good start with what's been collected so far," said Hutton.

Based on prior consultations, council has enacted environmental policies dealing with water usage.

To assist Didsbury residents, who have metered water in reducing the amount of water they consume the Town of Didsbury introduced a rebate program in June.

For each new low flush or dual flush toilet installed, the town will issue a $50 rebate.

Further discussion has recently occurred in regards to new alternative water conservation methods that town departments can incorporate.

Hutton provided information to council recently on numerous opportunities to reclaim and reuse water by town employees in Town off Didsbury buildings.

They included installing lever or mixer taps in town facilities that would let the user find the right water temperature quickly. This means staff won't waste water trying to get the balance right.

When cleaning, Hutton said staff could use a bucket to wash and rinse where possible, instead of running taps or hoses.

Because leaking taps can waste up to 200 litres of water each day, it's possible to reduce leaks by turning taps off lightly and replace washers as soon as they begin to leak.

In Hutton's research, she also found that incentives could be provided for staff to save water by linking water conservation to staff performance reviews.

Initiating Xeriscaping in town landscaping could also be productive, her report to council stated.

Council has asked for the report and further follow up investigation on alternative water conservation methods be brought to an upcoming committee of the whole for further discussion.

Deal in works for support workers

General support services workers at Didsbury's hospital are being encouraged to ratify a new agreement that provides for pay increases and on-call duty pay.

AUPE's three health care General Support Service bargaining committee recommended that members ratify new collective agreements recommended last week by a mediator.

The union bargaining teams went through the mediator's recommended terms of settlement in detail over the weekend and concluded that the 18,000 GSS members covered by the three agreements should support the proposals.

"The recommendations by the mediator address most of our members' concerns that were raised at all three tables," said AUPE President Doug Knight.

Didsbury hospital staff held an information rally outside the facility in recent weeks to generate support for contract negotiations.

"In addition to significant pay increases that reflect the economic factors impacting all our GSS members, the mediator's report includes significant market adjustments for many classes of workers whose pay and benefits have fallen behind counterparts in the private sector," said staff negotiator Malcolm McNaughton.

The contract is for a three-year term with pay increases of five per cent in each year of the agreement. Increases in on-call duty pay premiums would be bumped to $3 per hour on regular workdays and $4.25 per hour on named holidays. Improvements in evening, night and weekend shift differential pay to $2.25, $3 and $2.25 per hour respectively are also part of the proposed contract.

Smaller stores to get help

With Didsbury's population on the brink of 5,000, and almost 25 per cent of the labour force in the sales and service industry, the local chamber of commerce says entrepreneurs are always looking for ideas to improve the health of their business and the growth of their community.

Sometimes they need to hear from someone with the tools and techniques to thrive in the world of business, according to the chamber.

That opportunity has arrived, as the Didsbury Chamber of Commerce is pleased to bring in customer service activist, Roy Prevost from Burnaby, B.C. to speak on Sept 22.

Considered an authority on Wal-Mart and Big Box retail, Prevost talks to business owners and employees about their attitude, their vision, and how to create partnerships and alliances with other businesses, and with their customers.

"For the past six months or so, Didsbury and Olds businesses have experienced the impact that the new Cornerstone Development has had on them," says Kathleen Windsor, a Didsbury-based marketing and communications consultant based in Didsbury. "And of course, all that's happening in Balzac/Airdrie right now not only is going to affect Didsbury, but also Carstairs businesses."

The seminar and workshop is designed to empower smaller retailers to raise their standards regarding customer service and to focus on the positive elements of their business.

Prevost will be speaking at the Didsbury Five-O Club Sept. 22. Contact Kathleen Windsor to book your seat by calling 403-335-9445 or e-mail the chamber at info@didsburychamber.ca.

Livestock producers - By January 1, 2009:

- You will need to update your current Canadian Cattle Identification Agency (CCIA) premise identification information or apply for a new premise identification number if you don't have one.
- A new application form will be mailed to you only if you received the first AFRP II payment.
- The application will include a declaration and authorization for Agricultural Financial Services Corporation (AFSC) and Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development (ARD) to verify your information. Your information will be kept private and protected.

Cow-calf producers - By January 1, 2009:

Hopfe scores spot on Texas hockey team

Didsbury native, former AJHL all-star signs deal

BY TIM DENOUDSTEN
Didsbury Review

Hockey ace Brett Hopfe of Didsbury is off to the Lone Star state.

The 25-year-old forward recently signed a free agent contract for the 2008-09 season with the Laredo Bucks of the Central Hockey League, which boasts 16 teams scattered throughout the central United States.

"It feels pretty good. It's always been a dream of mine...to play professional hockey," Hopfe told the Review in a phone interview.

At 6'1" and 220 pounds, his commanding presence on the ice was one thing that particularly appealed to Laredo management.

"Hopfe has good size, he drives to the net hard," said Bucks head coach and general manager Terry Ruskowski in a release posted on the team's website. "Another good thing about him is that he likes the physical aspect of the game."

Hopfe noted that he has matured as a player since his two phenomenal campaigns with the AJHL's Olds Grizzlys, in which he was named an all-star both years.

"I think in Olds I was at times a little bit on the wild side when it comes to the physical aspect of my game," he said. "I think I've learned to control that a bit more. I know that there's times to drop the gloves and there's times not to."

He then went on to play four years with the NCAA Robert Morris Colonials, which gave him the chance to really hone his skills, since the team held practices nearly every weekday.

"You can't help but get better when you're on the ice two hours every day... I think both my speed and my skill developed quite a bit," Hopfe remarked, but explained that he is eager to return to a more abrasive brand of hockey that better fits the gritty playing style that earned him 579 penalty minutes in 118 games in Olds.

"In university, you're not allowed to fight. I think it's a part of the game that I enjoy and...I'm really excited to go down there and get into that again."

One of his teammates with the Colonials, Jeff Gilbert, signed with the Bucks earlier this summer. Indeed, Hopfe will find himself in familiar company, as a number of his former opponents will be among his teammates.

In addition, he is looking forward to playing in an arena where team veterans say the atmosphere is more akin to a European soccer stadium, thanks to passionate support from a large contingent of fans from nearby Mexico.

Like so many other young talented players, Hopfe dreams of one day hitting the ice in an NHL jersey, and the move to Laredo could certainly be a step in that direction.

"It's still a long way away, but I figured I've got an opportunity (with the Bucks) ... (to) hopefully try to make my way up the ranks."

According to coach Ruskowski, Hopfe has all the tools to perform extremely well for his new squad.

"If he can play like he did in juniors he will be a very successful guy on our team."

Letter to the editor Youth involvement in federal politics rewarding

In the last couple of years our family has gotten more involved in politics. We have attended debates and volunteered together. Getting involved as a family is a great way to learn how our political parties work and to meet your candidate. It is important that parents pass on an appreciation of the right and privilege to vote to their children. We cannot take it for granted. There are opportunities for young people to make valuable contributions to a party and to support their candidate and the values and vision they represent. I find it exciting to be part of what's going on and there are many things you can do such as installing signs, stuffing envelopes for mailings, canvassing, helping out at the campaign office and scrutineering.

This will be the first federal election my sister Becca (18) and I (20) can vote in, but it's not the first time we've voted.

I've voted four times in the last two years in both federal and provincial party nominations as well as the past provincial election. Most people don't realize this but you can become a member of the Conservative Party of Canada at the age of 14. At the provincial level (PC) you can become a member at 16. As a member, you have the option to be involved throughout the year, not just during an election. At the Annual General Meeting you can hear firsthand from your member of Parliament what our party is accomplishing in Ottawa. This past year Myron Thompson, MP, Stockwell Day, Minister of Public Safety, and Blake Richards, our new candidate for MP, gave excellent speeches. It was well worth attending.

Youth can be elected as directors on the Wild Rose Board, and can also participate in the making of Conservative policy. If you are interested in learning more about becoming a member of the Conservative Party of Canada you can contact me at youthpolitics@shaw.ca.

I am proud of our Conservative MPs who have been working so hard in Ottawa and am excited about what they have accomplished. I know that Blake Richards will work hard to represent the people of Wild Rose and to build a stronger, safer, better Canada for all Canadians.

DAN SINGLETON

The Stelmach government's recent announcement that it plans to consult Albertans about the future of public libraries is welcome news for all communities, including Didsbury.

The province has established a three-member MLA committee to work with library stakeholders to make sure libraries continue to play a vital and vibrant role in the community-at-large, both over the short and long term.

"Communities and library users have changed their expectations of what a public library service should provide," said Ray Danyluk, Minister of Municipal Affairs. "As a government, we also want to keep pace with these expectations. We will use input from the consultations to ensure we can better support libraries in their efforts to support Albertans."

The new committee will hold stakeholder consultation sessions in 11 locations across the province.

Stakeholder groups taking part will include library staff and volunteers, library board trustees and regional library system board trustees, municipal councils, and library support organizations.

During the sessions, discussions will focus on how the province can support a strong province-wide public library service, encourage collaboration to achieve benefits not possible from working independently, and maximize service delivery through the use of technology, says Danyluk.

The government will use input from the consultations to determine how best to support Alberta's libraries in meeting current and future needs, he said.

Many, many residents, both from town and from the surrounding district, regularly use Sundre's municipal library, recently relocated to a much larger and more modern facility.

It is not only a place where people can access books and other printed material, but it has also become a place where people gather to discuss community issues, to conduct research, to seek out government program support, and to make use of modern computer technology.

In a nutshell, the local library, like libraries in Olds, Carstairs and hundreds of other communities across rural Alberta, continues to be a vital part of the overall welfare of the community.

As such, it is important for this new committee to be well aware that any changes it may recommend regarding rural libraries must be directed towards promoting strong and vibrant facilities.

At the same time, any plans to target libraries in cost-cutting schemes will be wholly unacceptable to residents in this and other Alberta rural communities.

Premier Ed Stelmach says the new library review process is part of his commitment to "developing and implementing strategies that promote and enhance the vitality of our communities through culture and diversity."

"The strategy that results from these consultations will help address challenges today and build for the future," he says.

This consultation undertaking is a good idea and will hopefully lead to improvements in an already worthwhile community institution.

Didsbury Review

Central Albertans are once again soon headed back to the polls, as Prime Minister Stephen Harper recently called a federal election for Oct. 14.

To vote in the election, you must be a Canadian citizen and at least 18 years old as of election day.

At the polling station, you must also be able to prove your identity and address by producing your driver's licence or two other pieces of valid identification.

In addition, voter information cards showing that you are on the voters list and detailing the location and hours of your local polling station will be mailed out beginning Sept. 17. Be sure to bring this card with you when you go to vote.

If you don't receive a card, lose it or forget it, you can contact Elections Canada prior to the vote or register at the polling station.

"I hope we have a good turnout," says Airdrie realtor Ed Eggerer who has acted as the returning officer for the Wild Rose district since 1979. His role is to organize the voting and making sure it is done fairly.

The large Wild Rose riding, one of 308 such electoral districts throughout Canada, encompasses the entire area between the British Columbia border to the west, Calgary to the southeast and Red Deer to the northeast.

Eggerer cites "the satisfaction and opportunity to contribute to your country" as the reason he has continued to hold his post through 12 federal elections and one referendum.

Canada has been experimenting with electronic voting at various levels, but appears to be taking its cue from the Americans and other countries in continuing to use paper ballots in federal elections, says Eggerer.

This means some voters may be tempted to vent their frustration with the political system using a ballot.

However, Elections Canada indicates that defacing a ballot by eating it, not returning it or otherwise destroying or scribbling on it constitutes a serious breach of the Canada Elections Act.

Conviction of defacing a ballot could bring a $500 fine or three months in jail, although the chance of being caught is low.

"It can't be attributed to the individual because of the secrecy. It just goes unrecorded, unannounced, unknown. So you've wasted your time going to the poll in the first place," an Elections Canada spokesman told the Canadian Press before the 2006 election.

For this reason, defacing a ballot also fails as a protest tactic.

"Nobody gets real satisfaction out of it because nobody knows about it," noted the spokesman.

Eggerer is hoping for a stronger voter response than in the previous election.

"Last time we were in the 60 per cent range; that's not really acceptable...We certainly encourage all voters, especially young people (to participate)."

Advance polling will begin on Oct. 3 and conclude on Oct. 5. Mail-in ballots can also be submitted.

For more information about the Oct. 14 federal election and voting, contact Elections Canada at 1-800-463-6868 or visit the website at www.electionscanada.ca.
